Addiction Prehab To Rehab In Your Home

Are you willing to go into an inpatient facility for 30 to 120 days? Can or will you interrupt your daily life? If you are high profile, your family or business cannot function alone, or you would like an individualized care plan designed especially for you and your timeframe, an in-home program is your best choice. The "House Call Doctor" is back and he is bringing your whole addiction recovery team with him. Now you have options!

If you are committed to recovery and you are functional, doesn't it make more sense to learn to manage your addiction in your home and business environment and include your loved ones in the process? The major differences between inpatient and in-home is that at home you start recovering day one in reality and your recovery team can be with you for as long as you need them! Statistics show that over 75 percent to 90 percent of first time patients who receive treatment, relapse in the first year because they do not have a comprehensive aftercare program in place. It is a lot easier to learn and use your new coping skills when you have a consistent support team to advise you.

Both conventional and in-home treatment includes a medical and mental health component and experienced, well-educated clinicians. Here is how the two modalities differ. The inpatient facility is usually very structured in regard to time and activity scheduling. Group sessions are required. Generally there are no or minimal use of computers or cell phones. Family interaction is usually limited. In many cases a facility may specialize in certain ages, genders and/or addictions. After treatment your facility will usually try to arrange aftercare. Sometimes the in-home model also works for individuals who have gone away for treatment and now need a support group. This method allows you to take a break from real life. Of course, when there is an acute medical situation or an intervention occurs, inpatient care is recommended.

The in-home program is customized to address the needs of the patient. The time schedules are flexible as well. You can continue to work. Each program is unique because the patient can select the concierge services they desire. All sessions are individualized. Cells, phones, computers and other home conveniences are not limited. Family counseling is an integrated part of the treatment process. Specialists for all ages, genders and addictions are available as part of your recovery team. You do not need to re-enter reality. Transition from your initial treatment program to your aftercare is seamless.

If you are committed to recovery and want discreet, convenient and comprehensive care, in-home addiction treatment might be right for you.
